Book 7-1

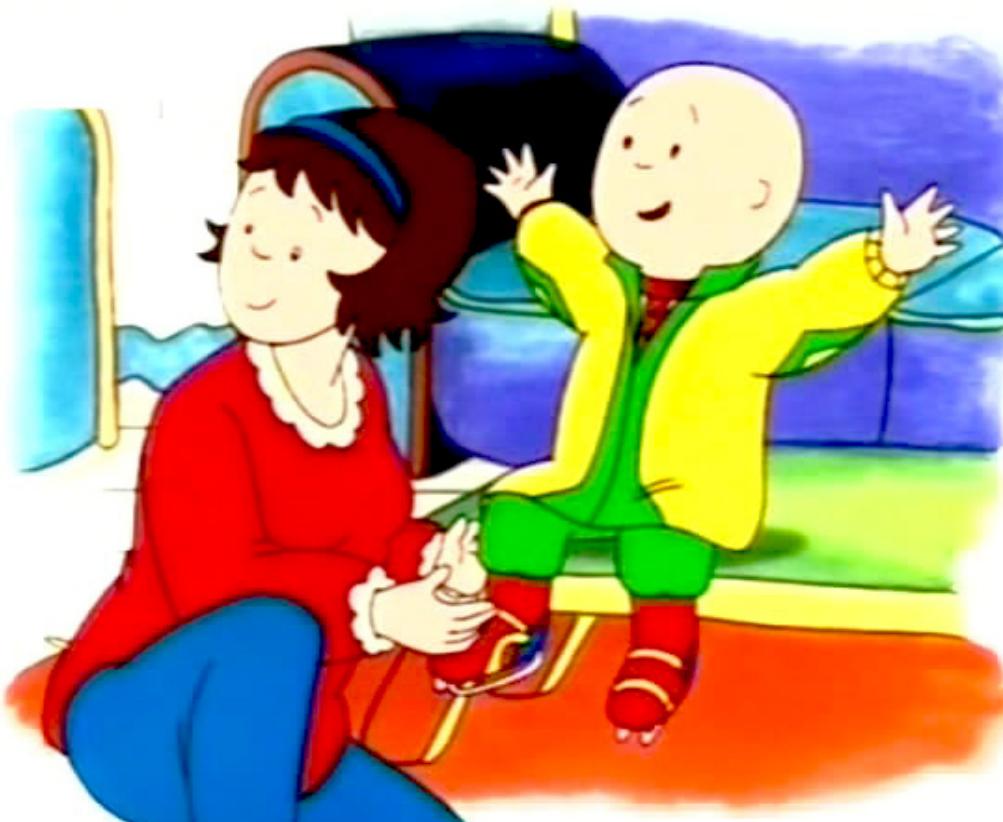

caillou learns to skate

Storyteller: This is a story of when Caillou learned to skate. It happened on a winter day, just like today.

Ever since Caillou watched a hockey game with his Mommy and Daddy, he wanted to skate.

So his Daddy made a skating rink in the backyard, and bought him his first pair of skates.

Announcer: He shoots! He scores!

Caillou: I wanna be a hockey player.

Mommy: Good! But first we need to learn to skate.

Caillou: I can skate fastest in the world. Look, Mommy! He fell down.

Mommy: So I'll be skating with the world champion. That's great!

Daddy: See, soon you'll be able to skate like this.

Mommy: Okay, now the first thing you have to learn is how to stand.

Storyteller: Caillou discovered that skating wasn't as easy as he thought it would be.

Mommy: Oh, Caillou!

Caillou: Mommy!

Daddy: This should help until you get the hang of it.

Mommy: And now you're ready to skate.

Caillou: I don't wanna skate any more. It's too hard.

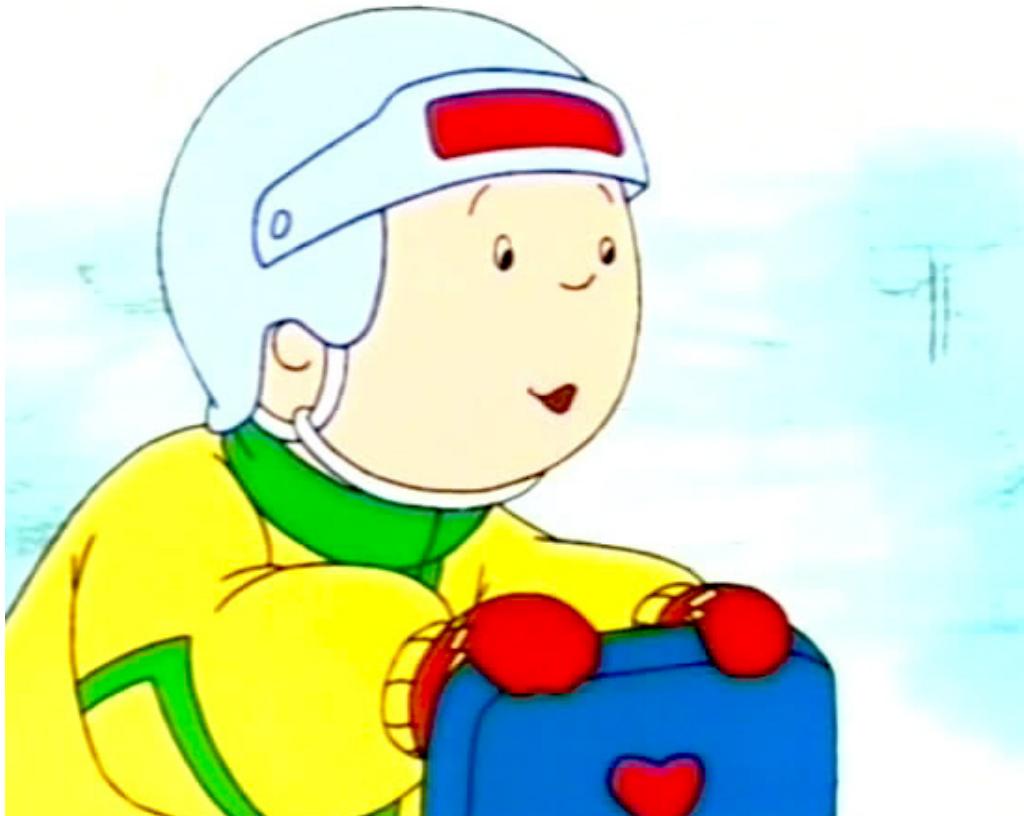

Daddy: I know it isn't easy. But I'm very proud of you for trying. Let's do it again.

Storyteller: Caillou was tired of falling and falling. But he did feel like trying one more time with his Daddy.

Caillou: I want to try again.

Mommy: Good for you.

Daddy: You're doing great, Caillou.

Caillou: Oh, no. Look, Daddy! I can do it.
Whoa! Yeah! Look at me.

Mommy: Are you all right, Caillou?
Caillou, you're skating. You're really skating.

Caillou: Look, Mommy! I'm skating.

Daddy: Who wants some hot chocolate?

Storyteller: After falling a lot, Caillou was finally getting the hang of it, except...

Caillou: Oh...Mommy! Daddy!

Mommy: Yes, Dear?

Daddy: I guess your next lesson will be how to turn. And then we'll have to think about getting you a hockey stick.

Caillou: A hockey stick? Wow!
